The project aims to answer the following questions:

- How the youngsters could observe and read their districts?
- How they could discover all the opportunities in order to increase their civic engagement?
- How they could build new collective and participative strategies to improve their impact as actors of social change?

The objectives of the project are:

- to improve the competences/skills of the youth workers on participative methodologies to be used with youth at risk of social exclusion;
- to increase the active participation of youth and their interest toward the development of their own neighborhoods.

The project foresees the realization of two activities:

- a training course for youth workers/educators (November 2018)
- a youth exchange (March 2019)

The activity 1 is focused on participative methodologies to support the youth workers in the realization of their activities with youth at risk of social exclusion.

The activity 2 is focused on the mapping of a specific neighborhood by tracking the resources, interviewing the inhabitants, mapping the most interesting places and creating a sketch book, with the aim of creating urban development proposals.

The two mobility activities will be realized in Palermo, Italy with the participation of 3 partners from Poland, Spain and Portugal.

Target groups:

- 22 youth workers/educators working with youth at risk of social exclusion (5 per each partner country, 7 from Italy)
